A portrait of Bashō, now in the Itsuo Museum, Ikeda City, Osaka
INTRODUCTION

Translating Bashō

The seeds for this translation of one of the classic works in Japanese literature were sown over forty years ago. One of the most compelling accounts of poetry I heard as an undergraduate student was a reading by Christopher Logue from what was then his recently published translation of Book 16 of Homer’s Iliad. Logue’s version sounded with an enormous, visceral power. It leapt, twisted, invented, clashed, modernised, contorted, visualised – in ways that made all other translations of the poem seem staid and bland. Since then, it has become clear that this dramatic and verbal energy was no isolated turn de force by a young poet. Forty four years later, Logue’s radical approach to translating the poem (All Day Permanent Red, 2003, a rendering of the first battle scenes in Books 5-8) retains all of its earlier power to wrench and dislocate the original into a contemporary poetic idiom. There is, however, one aspect of the translation that, then as now, is likely at the very least to bemuse, if not actually to shock. Logue cannot read ancient Greek, not a word of it. He has created his Iliad by consulting already existing renderings, developing a sense of what the original is saying, and then taking off to create his own version. In the words of one reviewer, on the surface at least ‘it’s like learning of a deaf man who prepared himself to conduct Stravinsky by watching Fantasia’.

However quixotic or foolish Logue’s task may seem, though, the unquestionable power and richness of the result raises a fundamental question: to what extent, if any, is it possible to translate from a language of which one has little or no knowledge? Is it simply impossible? Or will such a version have to rely upon so many extraneous aids (numerous other translations, massive resort to commentaries and dictionaries, constant oversight by native speakers of the original language, and so forth) as to drown any individual voice in what will be essentially the translation of a collective? If these supports are not available, will such a text inevitably have to be loose paraphrase or imitation or re-composition because the complex connotations of the original cannot be understood?

Or may there be some means by which all these barriers can be surmounted, and the original text presented in a close, faithful and resonant way?

This avowedly experimental translation of Matsuo Bashō’s Oku no Hosomichi raises all of the questions mentioned above; and while it may not answer all of them, it attempts at least to scrutinise, test and explore them. The personal journey may be worth describing briefly. At the very beginning of drafting the translation, I knew not a word of Japanese. I had for years been interested in haiku – that infinitely concentrated moment of perception condensed into 17 syllables of verse – and also in travel writing. And Bashō’s name had long been known, as one of the greatest exponents of both haiku and travelogue. But of the language in which he had written, I knew nothing.

Such ignorance might seem problematic enough in a translation from a European language with a similar script and basic structure. But from a language with a demonstrably different script and structure, the ignorance might seem insurmountable. Even a cursory reading in a Japanese grammar is enough to highlight quite radical differences between Japanese and English. Nouns in Japanese, to take a single example, have no gender, or case, or distinction between singular and plural. The Japanese for ‘dog’ or ‘a dog’ or ‘two dogs’ or ‘many dogs’ is the same word (‘inu’, in Romanised Japanese). Verbs, similarly, remain the same whether the person is first, second or third, singular or plural, masculine, feminine or neuter. There are no terms corresponding to the definite and indefinite articles: the tree and a tree are the same word, ‘ki’. Together with three different writing scripts (Kanji, Hiragana and Katakana), which can be written either vertically or horizontally, and a different sequencing of subject, object and verb, these features might seem to make for a total impenetrability – a language rooted in paradox and ambiguity, and understandable only after years of immersion.

Given this context, there are three major ways in which the challenge of translating Oku no Hosomichi has been taken up, and each is worth developing in a little detail:

other translations

There are currently no fewer than eight different translations into English of the whole of Oku no Hosomichi, together with several versions of parts of it. Placing these versions alongside each other at every step of the way allows two contrasting features to emerge: the lowest common denominators (whether part of speech or syntactic ordering) that all the versions share, but also the differences in tone and register between them. Consider, for instance, the celebrated opening ‘sentence’ to the travelogue:

The passing days and months are eternal travellers in time. The years that come and go are travelling too (Britton).

Moon & sun are passing figures of countless generations, and years coming or going wanderers too (Corman).

The moon and sun are eternal travellers. Even the years wander on (Hamill).

The months and days are the travellers of eternity. The years that come and go are also voyagers (Keene).

The sun and the moon are eternal voyagers; the years that come and go are travelers too (McCullough).

The months and days are the wayfarers of the centuries and as yet another year comes round, it, too, turns traveler (Miner).

The months and days are wayfarers of a hundred generations, and the years that come and go are also travelers (Sato).

Days and months are travelers of eternity. So are the years that pass by (Yuasa).

The shared denominators here can be easily identified:

- moon/sun (months/days)
- travellers/passing figures/wayfarers/wanderers
- eternal (eternity)/countless generations/of the centuries/of a hundred generations
- year/years/another year
- come and go/wander on/pass by too/also/so/even

Yet these common features are orchestrated very differently. The choice between moon or month, and sun or day, is answered by five translators in one way, and three in another. The definite article is in one case applied to both nouns; in five other cases, to only one; in two cases, to neither. Levels of diction vary: the generic ‘traveller’ is occasionally repeated, or juxtaposed against the more antique resonances of ‘wayfarer’ and ‘voyager’. In terms of rhythm, too, there are manifest differences: from the curt, rather banal ‘even the years wander on’, through the slightly convoluted, over-explanatory ‘and as yet another year comes round, it, too, turns traveller’, to the persuasive iambic stresses of ‘the years that come and go are travellers too’.

Such analysis of both the common and the individual features in each of the translations soon makes apparent the strengths and weaknesses of each rendering. Tired diction here, inappropriate register there; natural, unforced cadence here, resonant phrasing there. And as word is compared with word, phrase with phrase, an almost intuitive sense develops, not only of what Bashō’s original says, but of how it can best be translated into English. The mental notes made can be illustrated by reference to Bashō’s title, Oku no Hosomichi:

phrase only occurs at one point in the narrative (‘kano ezu ni makasete tadoriyukaba, oku no hosomichi no yamagiwa ni tofu no suge ari’) oku = general name for the northern provinces; can also mean ‘interior(s)’ or ‘inner recess(es)’ no = links two nouns: at, in, of, on hosomichi = thin/narrow + road/path/way

Narrow Road to a Far Province (Britton): no article before ‘Narrow Road’ – evocative, or dulling? ‘far’ is good. ‘Province’ – accurate but lacking resonance?

Back Roads to Far Towns (Corman): too overtly urban and modern. Why highlight ‘towns’? ‘Back roads’ suggests a detour from existing ‘main roads’, which is surely not what Bashō meant. Monosyllabic rhythm?

Narrow Road to the Interior (Hamill and Sato): no article again before ‘Narrow Road’ – I’m torn between finding this productively suggestive and rather bland. ‘Interior’ is good, intimating both geographical and psychological conditions.
INTRODUCTION

The Narrow Road to Oku (Keene): ‘to’ is better than ‘of’ in evoking sense of travel towards. But leaving ‘Oku’ untranslated will surely produce blankness, rather than telling ambiguity, to an English-speaking reader. What, who, where is ‘Oku’?

The Narrow Road of the Interior (McCullough): seems slightly prescriptive in resonance. ‘Of’ implies that the ‘Interior’ has already been reached, rather than travelled towards.

The Narrow Road to the Deep North (Yuasa): evocative, suggesting both the difficulty and the penetration of the journey. Perhaps ‘Deep North’ is a little free, but it well conveys the sense of a far-off land, reached only after difficulty.

Would it be worthwhile taking Yuasa’s hint and risking a very free adaptation of ‘Oku’ – something that evokes an emotional landscape, as well as a geographical one? Would ‘The Narrow Road to a Far-off Land’ do? On second thoughts, ‘Far-off Land’ could bring to mind a misleading fairy-tale dimension (‘Somewhere over the rainbow’...). Probably better, after all, to keep to ‘the Deep North’.

This kind of thought process, brought to bear on each word, phrase and section as the travelogue unfolds, results in a continual flow of judgment, both conscious and instinctive, about the most effective word, syntactic pattern, rhythm, and tone of voice.

word-for-word translations

In addition to the support provided by the eight translations above, there is a further resource: Makoto Ueda’s word-for-word versions of many of the haiku that punctuate Bashō’s travelogue. A single example will show how valuable even a literal translation of each word can be:

shizukasa ya iwa ni shimiiru semi no koe stillness ! rock ! to permeate cicada’s voice

Not only does this literal version indicate the order of the words and images in the original, but it also gives important signals about their relationships. The word ‘ya’, for instance, performs the function of a kireji, or ‘cutting word’. In Nobuyuki Yuasa’s words, ‘when a kireji is used in the middle of a poem it cuts the stream of thought for a brief moment, thereby indicating that the poem consists of two thoughts half independent of each other.’ ‘Ya’ also expresses a sense of wonder or excitement, and the closest English equivalent would probably be an exclamation mark. The opening five syllables, then, must evoke the wonder and profundity of the stillness, and conclude with the slightest of pauses before the poem resumes. When it does, another important signal is given: not simply the outer contrast between ‘rock’ and ‘voice’, but also the fact that ‘rock’ and ‘voice’ is the ordering, not ‘voice’ and ‘rock’. In other words, the ‘permeation’ of the rock is a preceding process before the suspended climax of perception, the cicada’s voice, is heard.

These features can emerge only from a word-for-word rendering of the original. But once recognised, they become part of the larger thought processes described earlier. How best to convey the sense of total stillness in five syllables, and then a momentary hiatus? How to anchor the rather generalised terms ‘permeate’ and ‘voice’ in a sensory immediacy? Is there one cicada, or are there many – and which is the more effective? The answers provided by the eight major translations conclude with Ueda’s version and then my own:

In this hush profound
Into the very rocks it seeps –
The cicada sound.
(Britton)

quiet
into rock absorbing

cicada sounds
(Corman)

Lonely stillness –
a single cicada’s cry
sinking into stone
(Hamill)

How still it is here –
Stinging into the stones,
The locusts’ trill.
(Keene)
INTRODUCTION

Ah, tranquillity!
Penetrating the very rock,
a cicada’s voice.
(McCullough)

In seclusion, silence.
Shrilling into the mountain boulder,
The cicada’s rasp.
(Miner)

Quietness: seeping into the rocks, the cicada’s voice
(Sato)

In the utter silence
Of a temple,
A cicada’s voice alone
Penetrates the rocks.
(Yuasa)

the stillness –    seeping into the rocks cicadas’ screech (Ueda)

the utter silence …
cutting through the very stone
a cicada’s rasp
(Chilcott)

The strengths and limitations of all of these versions will be quickly discernible. But it is worth noting that, unlike many translators, I have adhered to the basic 5-7-5 syllabic count of the original for all the haiku in this translation, and have chosen to avoid capitalisation and most punctuation marks. Such typographical signals can often seem intrusive, directing response rather than allowing the suggestiveness and ambiguity of the original free rein. Beginning a haiku with a capital letter and ending it with a full stop suggests the perception is contained solely within the words. But in truth, Bashō’s haiku begin before the first syllable is uttered, just as they sound long after the seventeenth syllable has been heard.

native speakers and resources

Whatever support other translations can give, however, there are inevitably moments when some crux arises that can be resolved only by appeal to a native Japanese speaker. Sometimes, the crux has to do with connotation and resonance (‘is a closer in meaning to b or to c? or is it to both b and c with a touch of d?’). Sometimes, it has to do with cultural circumstances or positions that are very different from those in the western world (for instance, are the many holy men that Bashō meets in his journey best described as ‘monks’, ‘priests’, ‘high priests’, ‘abbots’, ‘bishops’, ‘archbishops’, or indeed none of the above?). But when such questions have arisen in this translation, I have been able to avail myself of the native and bi-lingual knowledge of Dr Mark Jewel, of the University of Waseda, and of Masami Sato, of Hanazono University. To both, I offer my sincerest thanks for the generosity of their help and advice. I am grateful, also, to Kendon Stubbs, co-director of the Japanese Text Initiative at the University of Virginia; the text of Oku no hosomichi presented here is used by permission of the JTI, Electronic Text Center (http://etext.lib.virginia.edu/japanese). My thanks are due, too, to Peter Goodman and Stone Bridge Press for their kind permission to reproduce the map of Bashō’s journey contained in their Bashō’s Narrow Road: Spring & Autumn Passages, trans. Hiroaki Sato, 1996.

conclusion

Whether this translation of Bashō’s Oku no Hosomichi has proved or disproved the possibility of translating from a language of which one has little or no knowledge, is for individual readers to determine. The best judges, presumably, will be those readers who are totally bi-lingual, as sensitive to every register and nuance of Japanese as they are of English. For myself, I began drafting the translation entirely sceptical, believing it would prove impossible. And yet it has emerged and is here. At the beginning of this introduction, I quoted the words of one reviewer about Christopher Logue’s version of the Iliad: ‘it’s like learning of a deaf man who prepared himself to conduct Stravinsky by watching Fantasia’. My final position, I hope, may be of a partially hearing man who prepared himself to conduct Stravinsky by discovering, at least, how to read a musical score.

Tim Chilcott
July 2004
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1644</td>
<td>Born in the town of Ueno, in Iga Province, some thirty miles south-east of Kyoto. His father, Matsuo Yozaemon, is probably a low-ranking samurai, but little is known about his mother.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1656</td>
<td>His father, who may have been in the service of a local aristocratic family, the Tōdō, dies. Probably by this time, Bashō is also in the service of the family. He develops a close friendship with Tōdō Yoshitada, a boy two years older than him who is already interested in poetry. The two receive their first training in poetic composition together.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1662</td>
<td>Composes his earliest known haiku.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1666</td>
<td>Tōdō Yoshitada dies suddenly in his twenty-fifth year – an event that may have shocked Bashō so deeply that he resigned from the service and embarked on a life of wandering.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1666-71</td>
<td>No secure evidence about his whereabouts. He may have gone to live in Kyoto, or only visited it occasionally. He continues, however, to write: at least four poems in 1666, thirty-two in 1667, six in 1669, two in 1670, three in 1671.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1672</td>
<td>First goes to live in Edo (modern-day Tokyo), and in the next six years becomes more and more known in literary circles, writing hokku for anthologies, teaching, and judging poetry competitions. A school of Bashō gradually comes into being.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1677-81</td>
<td>Seems to have worked for a local waterworks company, while continuing to gain recognition as a poet.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1681</td>
<td>His students build a small house for him in Edo, and plant a bashō tree (a variety of banana tree) close by. It grows so well that his house becomes known as ‘the Bashō hut’ and he himself as ‘Master Bashō’, the pen name he adopts for the rest of his life.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1682-3</td>
<td>In the winter of 1682, the Bashō hut burns down in a fire that devastates large parts of Edo. Manages nevertheless to supervise the first full-scale anthology of his school, now comprising the work of over a hundred poets. His mother dies, but he remains too poor to be able to travel to her funeral. His students collect donations and provide him with new accommodation.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1684</td>
<td>Embarks on a journey that results in the first of his travel narratives, The Journal of a Weatherbeaten Skeleton.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1686</td>
<td>Composes what has since become the most famous of all haiku, about a frog leaping into a pond.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1687</td>
<td>In the winter of 1686-7, meets Sora, a neighbour who is later to become his companion in Oku no Hosomichi. Travels to the lake country some fifty miles northeast of Edo, which results in a short travel sketch, Kashima mōde (The pilgrimage to Kashima Shrine). Compiles Atsume ku (Collected verses), a collection of his work from the past three years. Sets out on another journey to western Japan, which results in Oi no kobumi (My knapsack notebook).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1688</td>
<td>Continues to travel. Writes Sarashina kikō (The journal of travel to Sarashina).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1689</td>
<td>Undertakes the long northern journey which is to result in Oku no Hosomichi. He leaves Edo in late spring and draws his journey to a close in Ōgaki five months later, as autumn begins to fall. He walks over twelve hundred miles. More than four years are spent composing, revising and polishing the final version.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1690-91</td>
<td>Continues to travel and to participate in haikai gatherings, although he is plagued with ill health.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1692</td>
<td>Another Bashō hut is built for him by his supporters, and he continues to participate in haikai gatherings.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
1693 heartbroken at the death of his nephew Tōin, whom he has cared for as a son since 1676. Closes the gate to his residence and refuses to see people altogether, although he later resumes normal social activities.

1694 begins planning another westward journey, although his health is failing and he feels his end is drawing near. But he sets out in early summer, carried on a litter. His illness becomes increasingly critical, and in late autumn, he dies. He is just fifty.
月日は百代の過客にして行かふ年も又旅人也。舟の上に生涯をうかべ、馬の口とらえて老をむかふれ物は日々旅にして旅を栖す。古人も多く旅に死せるあり。予もいづれの年よりか片雲の風にさされれて、漂白の思ひやまず、海濱にさすらへ、去年の秋江上の破屋に蜘の古巣をはらひてやゝ年も暮、春立る霞の空に白川の関こえんと、そよろ神の物につきて心をくるはせ、道祖神のまねきにあひて、取もの手につかず。もゝ引の破をつゞり、笠の緒付かえて、三里に灸すゆるより、松嶋の月先心にかゝりて、住る方は人に譲り、杉風が別墅に移るに、

草の戸も住替る代ぞひなの家

面八句を庵の柱に懸置。
弥生も末の七日、明ぼのゝ空朧々として、月は在明にて光おさまれる物から不二の峯幽にみえて、上野谷中の花の梢又いつかはと心ぼそし。むつまじきかぎりは宵よりつどひて舟に乗て送る。千じゆと云所にて船をあがれば、前途三千里のおもひ胸にふさがりて幻のちまたに離別の泪をそく。

行春や鳥啼魚の目は泪
是を矢立の初として、行道なをすゝまず。人々は途中に立ならびで、後かげののみゆる迄はと見送なるべし。

It was the twenty-seventh day of the Third Month [16 May]. There was a wan, thinning moon, and in the first pale light of dawn, the summit of Mount Fuji could be dimly seen. I wondered if I should ever see the cherry trees of Ueno and Yanaka again. My closest friends, who had gathered together the night before, got on the boat to see me off. We disembarked at Senju, and my heart was overwhelmed by the prospect of the vast journey ahead. Ephemeral though I know the world to be, when I stood at the crossroads of parting, I wept goodbye.

the spring is passing – the birds all mourn and fishes’ eyes are wet with tears

I wrote this verse to begin my travel diary, and then we started off, though it was hard to proceed. Behind, my friends were standing in a row, as if to watch till we were lost to sight.
ことし元禄二とせにや、奥羽長途の行脚、只かりそめに思ひたちて呉天に白髪の恨を重ぬといへ共耳にふれていまだめに見ぬさかひ若生て帰らばと定なき頼の末をかけ、其日漸早加と云宿にたどり着けり。瘦骨の肩にかゝれる物先くるしむ。只身すがらに出立侍を、帋子一衣は夜の防ぎ、ゆかた雨具墨筆のたぐひ、あるはさりがたき餞などしたるはさずがに打捨がたくて、路次の煩とになれるこそわりなけれ。

So that year – the second year of Genroku [1689] – I had suddenly taken it into my head to make the long journey into the deep north, to see with my own eyes places that I had only heard about, despite hardships enough to turn my hair white. I should be lucky to come back alive, but I staked my fortune on that uncertain hope.

We barely managed to reach the post-town of Sōka by nightfall. My greatest burden was the pack I carried on my thin, bony shoulders. I had planned to set out travelling light, but had ended up taking a paper coat to keep out the cold at night, a cotton dressing gown, rainwear, and ink and brushes, as well as various farewell presents that I could not refuse and that had to be accepted as burdens on the way.
室の八嶋に詣す。同行曾良が曰、「此神は木の花さくや姫の神と申て富士一躰也。無戸室に入て焼給ふちかひのみ中に、火々出見のみこと生れ給ひしより室の八嶋と申。又煙を讀習し侍もこの謂也」。将このしろといふ魚を禁ず。縁記の旨世に傳ふ事も侍し。
仏五左衛門

卅日、日光山の麓に泊る。あるじの云けるやう、「我名を佛五左衛門と云。萬正直を旨とする故に人かくは申侍まゝ、一夜の草の枕も打解て休み給へ」と云。いかなる仏の濃世塵土に示現して、かゝる桑門の乞食順礼ごときの人をたすけ給ふにやとあるじのなす事に心をとゞめてみるに、唯無智無分別にして正直偏固の者也。剛毅木訥の仁に近きたぐひ気禀の清質尤尊ぶべし。

On the last night of the third month [19 May], we found lodgings at the foot of Mount Nikkō. The innkeeper introduced himself as Gozaemon the Buddha. ‘I’m known as that because I put honesty first and foremost in everything I do. You can sleep here safe tonight with your minds at ease.’ We wondered what kind of Buddha it was that had taken on human form in this troubled, filthy world to help two beggar pilgrims. I observed him carefully, and saw that, however ignorant or clumsy he might have seemed, he was indeed a man of stubborn honesty. He was a man close to the Confucian ideal of Perfection: strong, simple, straightforward. I found his purity of heart most admirable.
On the first day of the fourth month [20 May], we went to worship at the mountain shrine. In ancient times, the name of the mountain was written Ni-kō [the Mountain of Two Storms]; but when the great teacher Kūkai built a temple here, he changed the name to Nik-ko [Sunlight]. He must have had the power to see a thousand years beyond, for the radiance of the shrine now shines throughout the heavens. Its blessings flow over the land to the farthest corners, and all the people live in security and peace. I was awestruck, barely able to tell it in words:

how holy a place …
green leaves, young leaves, and through them
the sunlight now bursts

Mount Kurokami [Mount Raven Hair], though veiled in mist, was still white with snow. Sora composed a poem:

I shaved off my hair and now at Kurokami
I change to new clothes

Sora is his pen name. His real name is Kawai Sōgorō. He built a house beside the lower leaves of my bashō tree, and used to help me with the chores of chopping firewood and drawing water. He was delighted at the thought of seeing Matsushima and Kisagata, and came to keep me company and share the hardships of the road. The morning we left, he shaved his head, changed into a priest’s black robes, and took the name of Sōgo [the Enlightened One]. That is why he wrote the Mount Kurokami poem. The words ‘I change to new clothes’ I find particularly effective.

A mile or so up the mountain was a waterfall. The water leaps forth from a hollow in the ridge and tumbles down a hundred feet into a dark green pool strewn with a thousand stones. You can squeeze between the rocks and the cascade, and see the waterfall from behind. Hence its name Urami-no-taki [Rear View Falls].

alone behind the waterfall a little while – now summer retreat
I had an acquaintance who lived in Kurobane in Nasu, so we decided to take the shortest route, straight across the plain. We took a bearing from a village in the distance, but as we walked, the rain began to fall and the darkness closed in. We took lodgings for the night at a farmhouse, and next morning started off again across the plain.

We came upon a horse grazing and a farmer cutting grass. We asked him the way. Although a simple, rustic man, he was full of sympathy. He pondered a while, then said, ‘What would be the best thing to do? The trails here criss-cross all over the place, and strangers like you could easily get lost. That worries me. I’ll let you have the horse. When he won’t go any further, just send him back.’ And with that, he leant us his horse.

Two small children followed us, running behind the horse. One of them, a little girl, was called Kasane [Double]. It was such an unusual and charming name that Sora wrote about it:

Kasane must be the name given the wild pink with double petals

Before long, we reached a village and turned the horse back home, with some money tied to the saddle.
We called on Jōbōji, the senior pro-governor of Kurobane. He was delighted to see us so unexpectedly, and kept us chatting away days and nights together. His younger brother, Tōsui, seized every chance to talk with us, and invited us to his own home, as well as introducing us to his relatives and friends. And so the time passed by.

One day, we took a stroll to the outskirts of the town, and saw the remains of the old dog-shooting grounds. We pressed further out on to the plains to pay our respects at the tomb of Lady Tamamo, and then at the shrine of Hachiman. We were especially moved when we heard that it was to this god that Yoichi had cried, as he aimed his arrow at the fan. As darkness fell, we returned to Tōsui’s house.

Nearby, there was a mountain-cult temple called Kōmyōji. We were invited there, and worshipped in the Hall of the Ascetic:

```
in summer mountains
we say prayers before the shoes ...
journey now begins
```
Behind Unganji temple in this province, up in the mountains, was a hermitage where the priest Butchō used to live. Butchō once told me that he had inscribed the following poem on a rock, in charcoal made from pine:

Oh how much I loathe building a shelter at all,
even a grass-thatched hut not five feet long or wide—if only it never rained …

I wanted to see what remained of the hut, and so, walking-staff in hand, I set out. A group of young people accompanied me on the way, chattering away happily, and before I knew it we had reached the foot of the mountain. It seemed so deep. A valley path stretched far into the distance, lined by darkly clustering pines and cedars. Dew dripped from the moss, and even though it was the Fourth Month [early summer], the air still felt cold. When we had passed all the Ten Sights, \textit{NOTE} we crossed a bridge and the temple gate.

Eager to discover the site of the hermitage, I scrambled up the hill behind the temple to a tiny hut built upon a rock, leaning against a cave. It was like coming upon the Death Gate of the monk Miao, or the stone chamber of the monk Fayun. I left an impromptu verse on a post in the hut:

even woodpeckers
leave the hermitage untouched in the summer trees 殺生岩・芦野

是より殺生石に行。館代より馬にて送らる。此口付のおのこ、短冊得させよと乞、やさしき事を望侍るものかなと、

野を横に馬牽むけよほとゝぎす

殺生石は温泉の出る山陰にあり。石の毒気いまだほろびず。蜂蝶のたくひ真砂の色の見えぬほどかさなり死す。

又、清水ながるゝの柳は芦野の里にありて田の畔に残る。此所の郡守戸部某の此柳みせばやなど、折々にの給ひ聞え給ふを、いづくのほどにやと思ひしを、今日此柳のかげにこそ立より侍つれ。

田一枚植て立去る柳かな
心許なき日かず重るまゝに、白川の関にかゝりて旅心定りぬ。いかで都へと便求しも断也。中にも此関は三関の一にして、風騒の人心をとゞむ。秋風を耳に残し、紅葉を俛にして、青葉の梢あはれ也。卯の花の白妙に茨の花の咲そひて、雪にもこゆる心地ぞする。古人冠を正し、衣装を改し事など、清輔の筆にもとゝめ置れしとぞ。

卯の花をかざしに関の晴着かな 曾良

Day after day had passed in vague uneasiness; but now we approached the Barrier at Shirakawa, and, for the first time, I felt that our journey had truly begun. I could understand why the poet NOTE had felt at this spot that he wanted to send word to the people in the capital that he had crossed the Barrier.

As one of the Three Barriers to the north, Shirakawa has always appealed to poets and writers. Yet even as I delighted in the green leaves of the trees, an autumn wind seemed to sound in my ears, and crimson leaves danced in my mind’s eye. The whiteness of deutzia, the white rambling roses, made us feel as if we were crossing the Barrier in snow. According to Kiyosuke, NOTE people of long ago straightened their hats as they crossed, and changed their clothes. Sora wrote:

sprigs of deutzia
adorn our hats – formal dress for the barrier
とかくして越行まゝにあぶくま川を渡る。左に会津根高く、右に
岩城相馬三春の庄、常陸下野の地をさかひて山つるなる。かげ沼 と云所を行に、今日は空曇て物影うつらず。

すが川の駅に等窮といふものを尋て、四五日とゞめらる。先白河 の関いかにこえつるやと問。長途のくるしみ身心つかれ、且は風 景に魂うばれ、懐旧に腸を断てはかんしゐめぐらさず。

風流の初やおくの田植うた

無下にこえんもさすがにと語れば、脇第三とつゞけて、三巻とな しぬ。

此宿の傍に、大なる栗の木陰をたのみて、世をいとふ僧有。橡ひろふ太山も かくやとしづかに覚られてものに書付侍る。其詞、

栗といふ文字は西の木と書て西方浄土に便ありと、行基菩薩の一生杖 にも柱にも此木を用給ふとかや。

世の人人の見付ぬ花や軒の栗

We passed the Barrier and crossed the Abukuma River. On our left, the peak of Aizu soared up high; on our right, the districts of Iwaki, Sōma and Miharu stretched out; behind us, the range of hills that separated the provinces of Hitachi and Shimotsuke. We passed Kagenuma [Shadow Pond], but the sky was overcast that day, and so there were no reflections.

At the post town of Sukagawa, we visited a poet called Tōkyū, who put us up for four or five days. The first thing he asked was, ‘How did you feel as you crossed the Barrier at Shirakawa?’ I replied that the hardships of our long journey had exhausted me in body and spirit.
Enchanted by the beauty of the landscape, and so much moved by the memories of the past that it awakened, I had not been able to compose a decent poem. Yet it would be a shame to let the crossing go unrecorded.
So I wrote:

imagination’s birth! a song for planting rice in the deep far north

From this opening, we added a second verse and then a third, until we had completed three sequences.

On the outskirts of the town, in the shade of a huge chestnut tree, there lived a monk who had turned his back upon the world. The lonely quietness of his hermitage reminded me of another place deep in the mountains, where horse chestnuts had been gathered. I jotted down a few words:

The character for ‘chestnut’ means ‘west tree’, indicating its connection with the Paradise to the West. It’s said that the priest Gyōgi used the wood all his life for his walking-sticks and the pillars of his house:

people in the world
hardly notice these blossoms – chestnuts by the eaves
Some twelve miles or so from Tōkyū’s house, just beyond Hiwada, is Mount Asaka. It rises up close to the road, and there are many marshes round about. It was almost the season for picking katsumi iris. We kept on asking, “Which plant is the flowering katsumi?” But no-one knew. We wandered about the marshes, asking everyone the same question, till the sun sank behind the rim of the hills.

We turned off to the right at Nihonmatsu, paid a hasty visit to the cave at Kurozuka, and stopped for the night at Fukushima.
The following morning, we set off to Shinobu in search of the Fern-print Rock. We found it half buried in the soil of a remote hamlet overshadowed by a mountain. Some village children came up and told us that, in the old days, the stone had stood on top of the mountain. But the people who went up there to rub the cloth on the stone with ferns had torn off leaves of barley too. The farmers had become so annoyed, they had pushed the stone down into the valley – which was why it was now lying upside down. The story was not impossible:

hands planting seedlings were hands once rubbing patterns with ferns, long ago
月の輪のわたしを越して、瀬の上と雲宿に出づ。佐藤庄司が旧跡は
左の山際一里半計に有。飯塚の里鯖野と聞て尋／行に、丸山と 雲に尋あたる。是庄司の旧館なり。梺に大手の跡など人の教ゆる にかかせて泪を落し、又かたはらの古寺に一家の石碑を残す。中 にも二人の嫁がしるし先哀也。女なれどもかひ%騒ぎ名の世に 聞えつる物かなと袂をぬらしぬ。堕涙の石碑も遠きにあらず。寺 に入て茶を乞へば、蕪に義経の太刀弁慶が笈をとつめて什物とす。

笈も太刀も五月にかざれ帋幟 五月朔日の事也。
We stayed the night at Iizuka. We bathed in the hot springs there, and then rented a room. The inn turned out to be a wretched hovel, with straw mats spread over the dirt floor. There wasn’t even a lamp, so we made up our beds in the light from a hearth fire and lay down. Throughout the night, the thunder rolled, and the rain poured down in torrents. What with the roof leaking down on us just where we lay, and the fleas and mosquitoes biting, I couldn’t sleep at all. To make matters worse, my old complaint flared up again, causing such pain I almost fainted.

The short summer night came to an end at last, and we set off again. I hired a horse to the post-station of Kōri, still feeling the after-effects of the night before. I was worried about my sickness, when such a great distance still remained ahead. But I told myself that, when I’d started on this journey to the remotest regions, I’d been aware of giving up all worldly things and facing life’s transience. If I should die on the road, that would be Heaven’s will. Such thoughts helped restore my spirits a little, and I passed through the Great Gate of Date with some boldness in my step.
<笠嶋>
鍾摺白石の城を過、笠嶋の郡に入れば、藤中将実方の塚はいづく のほどならんと人にとへば、是より遥右に見ゆる山際の里をみの
わ笠嶋と云。道祖神の社、かた見の薄今にありと教ゆ。此比の五 月雨に道いとあしく、身つかれ侍れば、よそながら眺やりて過る に、蓑輪笠嶋も五月雨の折にふれてりと、 笠嶋はいづこさ月のぬかり道 岩沼に宿る。

Passing by Abumizuri and Shiroishi castles, we arrived at the district of Kasajima, and inquired about the grave of the governor Sanekata, of the Fujiwara family. A man told us, ‘Those villages you can see at the foot of the mountain way off to the right are Minowa and Kasajima. The shrine to the spirits of the road and the memorial of pampas-grass are still there.’
After the heavy rains of previous days, the road was in an awful state, and I was so tired that we contented ourselves with simply looking that way as we trudged on. The names Minowa [Raincoat] and Kasajima [Umbrella] were so well suited to the rainy season that I wrote this verse:

so whereabouts is Rain-Hat isle? how far along muddy roads of June

We stayed the night at Iwanuma.
武隈の松にこそめ覚る心地はすれ。根は土際より二木にわたれて、昔の姿うしなはずとしらる。先能因法師思ひ出、往昔むつのかみにて下りし人、此木を伐て、名取川の橋杭にせられたる事などあればにや。松は此たび跡もなしとは詠たり。代々あるは伐、あるひは植継などせしと聞に、今将千歳のかたちとゝのひて、めでたき松のけしきになん侍し。

武隈の松みせ申せ遅桜と挙白と雲ものゝ餞別したりければ、 桜より松は二木を三月越シ。
名取川を渡て仙台に入。あやめふく日也。旅宿をもとめて四五日逗留す。爰に画工加衛門と云ものあり。聊心ある者と聞て知る人になる。この年比さだかなる名ところを考置侍ればとて、一日案内す。宮城野の萩茂りあひて、秋の景色思ひやらるゝ。玉田よこ野つつじが岡はあせび咲ころ也。日影ももらぬ松の林にて

あやめ艸足に結ん草鞋の緒

We crossed the river Natori and went into Sendai. It was the day when people hang blue irises beneath the eaves. We found an inn where we stayed for four or five days.

In the town, there was a painter called Kaemon. I had heard he was a man of truly artistic taste, and I got to know him. He told me he had spent several years tracing places mentioned in poetry that had become hard to locate; and one day, he took us to see some of them. The fields of Miyagino were thick with bush clover, and I could imagine the sight in autumn. It was the season when the pieris flowered around Tamada, Yokono and Tsutsuji-ga-oka. We walked through a pine forest so thick that sunlight could not penetrate at all, and were told its name, Konoshita [Under-the-Trees]. The dripping dew must have been heavy there even in ancient times, for in one poem, a servant is asked to tell his lord to take an straw hat. We offered prayers at Yakushidō Shrine and the Shrine at Tenjin before the day drew to a close.

As parting gifts, Kaemon presented us with sketches of Matsushima and Shiogama and various other local places. He also gave us two pairs of straw sandals, with straps deep iris-blue. These presents showed how much a man of cultivated taste he was:

I will bind iris blossoms round about my feet – straps for my sandals 壺の碑

かの画図にまかせてたどり行ば、おくの細道の山際に
十符の菅蒔。今も年々十符の菅菰を調て国守に献ずと云り。

壺碑　市川村多賀城に有

つぼの石ぶみは高サ六尺餘横三尺計歟。苔を穿て文字幽也。四維
国界之数里をしるす。此城、神亀元年、按察使鎮守府将軍大野朝 臣東人之所置也。天平宝字六年、参議東海東山節度使、同将軍恵 美朝臣獲修造而十二月朔日と有。聖武皇帝の御時に当れり。

むかしよりよみ置る哥枕、おほく語傳ふといへども、山崩川落て 、跡あらたまり、石は埋て土にかくれ、木は老て若木にかはれば 、時移り代変じて、其跡たしかならぬ事のみを、爰に至りて疑な
き千歳の記念、今眼前に古人の心を閲す。行脚の一徳、存命の悦
び、縈旅の労をわすれて泪も落るばかり也。
それより野田の玉川の石を尋ぬ。末の松山は寺を造りて末松山といふ。松のあひ
皆墓はらにて、はねをかはし枝をつらぬる契の末も終はかくのごときと悲しさも増りて、塩がまの浦に入相のかねを聞。五月雨の空聊はれて、夕月夜幽に、籬が嶋もほど近
し。蜑の小舟こぎつれて、肴わかつ声／に、つなでかなしもとよみけん心もしされて、いとゞ哀也。其夜、目盲法師の琵琶をな
らして奥上るりと云をたる。平家にもあらず、舞にもあらず。ひなびたる調子うち上て、枕ちかうかしきれど、さすがに辺土の遺風忘れざるものから、殊勝に覚らる。
早朝塩がまの明神に詣。国守再興せられて、宮柱ふとしく彩椽らびやかに石の階、九仭に重り、朝日あけの玉がきをかゞやかす。かゝる道の果塵土の境まで、神霊あらたにましますこそ、吾国の風俗

なるどいと貴けれ。神前に古き宝燈有。かねの戸びらの面に文治三年和泉三郎寄進と有。五百年来の偽今目の前にうかびて、そゝろに珍し。渠は勇義忠孝の士也。佳命数今に至りて、したはずといふ事なし。誠人能道を勤、義を守べし。名もまた是にしたがふと云り。日既午にちかし。船をかりて松嶋にわたる。其間二里餘、雄嶋の磯につく。

Early the next morning, we visited the Shrine at Shiogama, which had been restored by the governor of the province. Its pillars stood huge and majestic, brightly painted rafters sparkled, and stone steps rose up flight after flight. The crimson fencing was dazzling in the morning sunlight. How wonderful it was, I thought, that in this land of ours, the divine powers of the gods should show themselves even in so remote a place as this.

In front of the sanctuary, there was an old lantern with an inscription on its iron door, ‘Presented by Izumi-no-Saburō in the third year of Bunji [1187]’. It was strange how these words brought back things unchanged for over five hundred years. Izumi-no-Saburō had been a brave and honourable soldier, a loyal and loving son. His fame has lasted to the present day, and there is no one now who does not honour him. How true it is that, if men strive to walk in the way of truth and uphold righteousness, fame will follow of itself.

It was nearly noon. We hired a boat and crossed to Matsushima. After five miles on the water, we landed on the beach of the island of Ojima.
松島

抑ことふりにたれど、松嶋は扶桑第一の好風にして、凡洞庭西湖を恥ず。東南より海を入て、江の中三里、浙江の湖をたゝふ。嶋の数を尽して、欹ものは天を指、ふすものは波に葡蔔。あるは二重にかさなり三重に畳みて、左にわかれ右につらなる。負るあり抱るあり、児孫愛すがごとし。松の緑こまやかに、枝葉汐風に吹たはめて、屈曲をのづからためたるがごとし。其景色えう然として美人の顔を粧ふ。ちはや振神のむかし、大山ずみのなせるわざにや。造化の天工、いづれの人か筆をふるひ詞を尽さむ。雄嶋が磯は地つゞきて海に出たる嶋也。雲居禅師の別室の跡、坐禅石など有。将松の木陰に世をいとふ人も稀に見侍りて、落穂松笠など打けぶりたる草の庵閑に住なし、いかなる人とは知れずながら、先なつかしく立寄ほどに、月海にうつりて昼のながめ又あらたむ。江上に帰りて宿を求れば、窓をひらき二階を作て、風雲の中に旅寝するこそ、あやしきまで妙なる心地はせられる。

予は口をとぢて眠らんとしていねられず。旧庵をわかるゝ時、素堂松嶋の詩あり。原安適松がうらしまの和哥を贈らる。袋を解てこよびの友とす。且杉風濁子が発句あり。

No matter how often it has been said, Matsushima is the most beautiful place in all Japan, and can easily hold its own against T'ung-t'ing or the Western Lake in China. The sea surges in from the southeast into a bay seven miles across, its waters brimming full like the Zhejiang River in China. There are more islands than anyone could count. Some rise up steeply, as through thrusting towards the skies; some are flat, and seem to crawl on their stomachs into the waves. Some seem piled double, or even three layers high. To the left, they appear separate; to the right, joined together. Some look as if they carried others on their backs, and some as if they held them in their arms, like a parent caring for a little child or grandchild. The pines are of the deepest green, and their branches, constantly buffeted by the winds from the sea, seem to have acquired a twisted shape quite naturally. The scene suggests the serene charm of a lovely woman's face. Matsushima truly might have been created by Ōyamazumi [God of the Mountains] in the Great Age of the Gods. What painter or what writer could ever capture fully the wonder of this masterpiece of nature?

The Island of Ojima [Male Island] juts out from the mainland into the sea. Here are the remains of the priest Ungo’s retreat, and the rock on which he used to meditate. I glimpsed a few other recluses among the pines as well. We saw smoke rising from a fire of twigs and pine cones at one quiet, thatched hut. We did not know what kind of man the occupant might be, and yet we felt drawn towards the spot. As we approached, the moon shone down upon the water, transforming the scene from how it had appeared by day.

We returned to the shore and found lodgings, a second-storey room with open windows that looked out over the bay. As we lay there in the midst of breeze and cloud, I felt a marvellous exhilaration. Sora wrote:

Matsushima, oh …

you will need cranes’ wings to fly
little cuckoo bird

I was silent. I tried to sleep but could not. When I had left my old cottage, I had been presented by Sōdō with a poem in Chinese about Matsushima, and a tanka by Hara Anteki about Matsu-ga-urashima [Bay Isle of Pines]. I took them out of my bag as my companions for the night. I had some hokku too, composed by Sanpū and Jokushi.
On the eleventh, we visited the temple at Zuigan. Long, long ago – thirty-two generations before the present – Makabe no Heishirō had entered Buddhist orders, gone to China to study, and then returned to found the temple. Later, under the goodly influence of the monk Ungo, its seven halls had been rebuilt. Now the temple was a great centre of worship, with dazzling golden walls – a true paradise on earth. Yet still I wondered where the holy man Kenbutsu’s temple might have been.
十二日、平和泉と心ざし、あねはの松緒だえの橋など聞傳て、人跡稀に雉兎蒭ぜうの往かふ道、そこともわかず、終に路ふみたがえて石の巻といふ湊に出。こがね花咲とよみて奉たる金花山海上に見わたし、数百の廻船入江につどひ、人家地をあらそひて、竃の煙立つゝけたり。思ひがけず斯る所にも来れる哉と、宿からんとすれど、更に宿かす人なし。漸まどしき小家に一夜をあかして、明れば又しらぬ道まよひ行。袖のわたり尾ぶちの牧まのゝ萱らなどよそめにみて、遥なる堤を行。心細き長沼にそふて、戸伊摩と云所に一宿して、平泉に到る。其間廿余里ほどとおぼゆ。
三代の栄耀一睡の中にして、大門の跡は一里こなたに有。秀衡が跡は田野に成て、金鶏山のみ形を残す。先高館にのぼれば、北上川南郡より流るゝ大河也。衣川は和泉が城をめぐりて高館の下にて、大河に落る。康衡等が旧跡は衣が関を隔て南部口をさし戦め、夷をふせぐとみえたり。僕も義臣すぐつて此城にこもり、功名一時の叢となる。国破れて山河あり。城春にして草青みたりと笠打敷て、時のうつるまで泪を落し侍りぬ。

夏草や兵どもが夢の跡
卵の花に兼房みゆる白毛かな 鳥良

兼て耳驚したる二堂開帳す。経堂は三将の像をのこし、光堂は三代の棺を納め、三尊の仏を安置す。七宝散うせて、珠の扉風にやぶれ、金の柱霜雪に朽て、既頽廃空虚の叢と成べきを、四面新に囲て、甍を覆て風雨を凌。暫時千歳の記念とはなれり。

五月雨の降のこして光堂

The glory of three generations of the Fujiwara passed as if in a dream. Their Great Gate lies in ruins, two miles this side of the castle. The land where Hidehira’s mansion stood has now returned to paddy fields. Only Mount Kinkeizan [Gold Cockrel Mountain] looks the same as in the past. We climbed up Takadachi [Palace on the Heights] first. From there, we could see the Kitakami, a mighty river that flows down from Nanbu, and also the Koromo, a river that circles round Izumi Castle before it empties into the big river below Takadachi. Yasuhira’s castle stands beyond the Koromo Barrier, seemingly to protect the Nanbu gateway from invasion by the Ainu. There at Takadachi, Yoshitsune and a chosen band of loyal men tried to entrench themselves – but their heroic actions turned in the twinkling of an eye to nothing more than clumps of grass:

The country is destroyed; yet mountains and rivers remain. Spring comes to the castle; the grass is green again.

With my hat as a seat, and these lines running through my head, I stayed there weeping till time seemed no more.

mounds of summer grass –
the place where noble soldiers one time dreamed a dream

in deutzia flowers
Kanefusa seems to me –
oh, such white, white hair
(Sora)

The two halls we had heard so much about were both open. In the Sutra Hall stood the statues of the three generals of Hiraisumi; in the Golden Hall, their coffins and three sacred images. The Golden Hall’s seven precious things NOTE had been scattered and lost, the gem-studded doors ravaged by the winds, the gold-fretted pillars rotted by the frosts and snow. The temple would certainly have collapsed and turned to nothing more than grass, had not new walls been built around, and a tiled roof put on against the wind and rain. A memorial of a thousand years has, for a little time, been preserved.

so the rains of spring fall and fall, yet leave untouched
this bright Hall of Gold 南部道遥にみやきて、岩手の里に泊る。小黒崎みづの小嶋を過て、なるこの湯より、尿前の関にかゝりて、出羽の国に越んとす。此路旅人稀なる所なれば、関守にあやしまれて、漸として関をこす。大山をのぼつて日既暮れば、封人の家を見かけて舎を求む。三日風雨てて、よしなき山中に逗留す。

蚤虱馬の尿する枕もと
あるじの云、是より出羽の国に大山を隔て、道さだかならざれば、道しるべの人を頼て越べきを申。さらばと云て人を頼侍れば、究境の若者反脇指をよこたえ、樫の杖を携て、我が先に立て行。けふこそ必あやうきめにもあふべき日なれと、辛き思ひをなして後について行。あるじの云にたがはず、高山森として一鳥声きかず、木の下闇茂りあひて夜る行がごとし。雲端につちふる心地して、篠の中踏分、水をわたり岩に蹶て、肌につめたき汗を流して、最上の庄に出づ。かの案内せしみのこの云やう、此みち必不用の事有。恙なうをくりまいらせ、仕合したりと、よろこびわかれぬ。跡に聞てさへ胸とどくのみ也。

The road to Nanbu stretched far away towards the north, so we turned back and spent the night at the village of Iwade. From there, we passed by Ogurazaki and Mizu-no-oyima, and from the hot springs at Narugo, headed for the Barrier at Shitomae, intending to cross into Dewa Province. The road was so little used by travellers that the guards at the checkpoint examined us suspiciously, and we barely managed to get through. As we toiled upwards on the mountain, the darkness began to fall, so when we saw a house belonging to a border guard, we asked for shelter. For three whole days, the wildest storm raged on, and trapped us there, among the dreary mountains:

Fleas and lice all round — and now a horse that piddles right by my pillow

Our host told us that the road into Dewa was an ill-marked trail through high mountains; we would be wise to hire a guide to show us the way. We agreed, and hired a strapping young man, who strode ahead with a scimitar at his side and an oak staff in his hand. As we followed him, we worried that this would be the day we were sure to run into danger. Just as our host had said, the mountains were high and densely wooded. Not a single bird-cry could be heard. It was dark beneath the canopy of trees, so dark it was like walking in the night. Feeling as if 'dust was raining from the edges of the clouds' NOTE, we groped our way through thickets of bamboo, waded across streams, stumbled over rocks, all the while in a cold sweat of fear, until at last we reached the town of Mogami. In high spirits, our guide then told us that unpleasant things were always happening on the trail we’d followed. He’d been lucky to bring us through in safety. Even though the danger was now past, his words made our hearts still pound.
尾花沢にて清風と云者を尋ぬ。かれは富のものなれども、志いや
しからず。都にも折々かよひてさすがに旅の情をも知たれば、日 比とくめて、長途のいたはり、さまへにもてなし侍る。

涼しさを我宿にしてねまる也 誰出よかひやが下のひきの声 まゆはきを俤にして紅粉の花 蠶飼する人は古代のすがた哉 曾良

At Obanazawa, we called on Seifū, a man whose wealth did not eclipse his fine taste. As a frequent visitor to the capital, he knew what it felt like to be a traveller; and he made us stay for several days, showering us with all kinds of hospitality, to make us forget the hardships of our long journey.

the lovely coolness
of this lodging – I sit here wholly at my ease

come on, crawl out now!
beneath the silkworm nursery
croaking of a toad

so they bring to mind
a lady’s small eyebrow brush –
these saffron blossoms

the silkworm nurses –
figures that bring back to mind
a time long ago

Sora
山形領に立石寺と云山寺あり。慈覚大師の開基にて、殊清閑の地也。一見すべきよし、人々のすゝむるに依て、尾花沢よりとつて返し、其間七里ばかり也。日いまだ暮ず。柵の坊に宿かり置て、山上の堂にのぼる。岩に巒を重て山とし、松柏年旧土石老て苔滑に、岩上の院々扉を閉て物の音きこえず。岸をめぐり、岩を這て仏閣を拝し、佳景寂寞として心すみ行のみおぼゆ。

閑さや岩にしみ入蝉の声

In the province of Yamagata, there is a mountain temple called Ryūshaku-ji. Founded by the Great Teacher Jikaku, it is a wonderfully serene and tranquil place. We had been urged to go there, and so had retraced our steps from Obanazawa, a distance of some seventeen miles. It was still daylight when we arrived. We reserved a lodging in the pilgrims’ hostel at the foot of the mountain, and then climbed up to the temple on the summit. The mountain was made up of boulder upon boulder, with ancient pines and cypresses upon its slopes. Moss lay like velvet upon the soil and stones. At the summit, the temple doors were closed, and not one single sound was to be heard. But we skirted round the cliffs and scrambled over the rocks, and reached the temple precincts. The quiet and lonely beauty of the place seemed to purify our hearts:

the utter silence …
cutting through the very stone
a cicada’s rasp
最上川

最上川のらんと、大石田と云所に日和を待。愛に古き誹諧の種こぼれて、忘れぬ花のむかしをしたひ、芦角一声の心をやはらげ、此道にさぐりあしゝて、新古ふた道にふみまよふといへども、みちしるべする人しなければとわりなき一巻残しぬ。このたびの風流愛に至れり。

五月雨をあつめて早し最上川

We hoped to sail down the Mogami River, and waited for the weather to clear at a place called Ōishi. I was told that the seeds of the old haikai poetry had been scattered here, and that people still cherished the memory of those unforgotten flowers from the past. The rustic notes of simple reeds and horns could still bring music to their hearts. They had tried, they said, to grope their way towards the right path. But without a guide, they had found it difficult to choose between the old styles and the new. I could scarcely leave without composing with them a sequence of poems. The poetry-making of my journey had reached even here.

The Mogami River has its source deep in the northern mountains, and its upper reaches run through Yamagata. The Goten [Go-stones] and Hayabusa [Falcon] rapids are just two of the terrifying dangers on its course. It skirts Mount Itajiki on the north and finally enters the sea at Sakata. Our boat cascaded down through thick foliage, with mountains overhanging us on either side. It was probably the same kind of boat that the old poem described as ‘rice boats’, though those were laden with grain. Through breaks in the green leaves, we could see the Shiraito [White Thread] Falls. The Semmindo [Mountain Wizard] Hall stands there too, right at the water’s edge. The river was swollen, and our journey dangerous:

gathering the rains of summer, how swift it is – Mogami River.
出羽三山

六月三日、羽黒山に登る。図司左吉と云者を尋て、別当代会覚阿闍利に謁す。南谷の別院に舎して憐愍の情こまやかにあるじせらる。

四日、本坊にをゐて誹諧興行。

有難や雪をかほらす南谷

五日、権現に詣。当山開闢能除大師はいづれの代の人と云事をしらず。延喜式に羽州里山の神社と有。書写、黒の字を里山となせるにや。羽州黒山を中略して羽黒山と云にや。

出羽といへるも鳥の毛羽を此国の貢に献ると風土記に侍とやらん。月山湯殿を合て三山とす。当寺武江東叡に属して天台止観の月明らかに、円頓融通の法の灯かゝげそひて、僧坊棟をならべ、修験行法を励し、霊山霊地の験効、人貴且恐る。繁栄長にしてめで度御山と謂つべし。

八日、月山にのぼる。木綿しめ身に引かけ、宝冠に頭を包、強力と云ものに

道ひかれて、雲霧山気の中に氷雪を踏てのぼる事八里、更に日月行道の雲間に入かとあやされ、息絶身こゞえて頂上にいたれば、日没て月顕る。笹を鋪篠を枕として、臥て明るを待。日出て雲消れば湯殿に下る。

谷の傍に鍛治小屋と云有。此国の鍛治、霊水を撰て爰に潔斉して劔を打、

On the third day of the sixth month [19 July], we climbed Mount Haguro. There we visited a man called Zushi Sakichi, who obtained for us an audience with the chief priest, Egaku. He put us up in the Minamidani [Southern Valley] temple, and treated us with the greatest kindness.

On the fourth day, there was a haikai gathering at the high priest’s residence:

oh what sweet delight …
the cool fragrances of snow
in southern valley

On the fifth day, we went to worship at Haguro shrine. It was founded by the Great Teacher Nōjo, though nobody now knows at what period he lived. The Engi Book of Ceremonies mentions a shrine called ‘Satoyama in Dewa Province’. But it is possible that sato is a copyist’s error for kuro. Perhaps, too, Haguroyama is an abbreviation of Ushū Kuroyama. According to the local guide-book, the name Dewa [present feathers] derives from the custom in this province of offering birds’ feathers as a tribute.

Haguro, together with Gassan and Yudono mountains, make up the Three Mountains of Dewa. The temple here is affiliated with Tōeizan Kan’ei-ji Temple in Edo. Lit by the bright moon of Tendai concentration and insight, it holds up the lamp of perfection and enlightenment. The monks’ quarters stand row upon row; and the ascetics practise their discipline with zeal. You cannot but feel both reverence and awe before the miraculous power of this holy place. It will flourish for ever, this magnificent mountain.

On the eighth day, we climbed Gassan [Moon Mountain]. Wearing paper necklaces, with white turbans round our heads, we toiled upwards for twenty miles, led by a sturdy mountain guide, through clouds and mists, over ice and snow. We wondered if we would not soon share the paths followed by the sun and moon. Breathless and numb with cold, we finally reached the summit, just as the sun was setting and the moon rising. Spreading out a bed of bamboo-grass, with bamboo leaves as pillows, we lay down and waited for the dawn. As the sun rose and burned away the clouds, we started down towards Yudono.

Close to the valley, we passed what had been a smithy. The sword-smiths of the province had used the holy waters here to purify themselves and forge their celebrated swords, which finally they would engrave with the name ‘Gassan’ [Moon Mountain]. I remembered that swords used to be tempered, too, at the Dragon Springs in China. Inspired by the 終月山を銘を切て世に賞せらる。彼龍泉に剣を淬とかや、干将莫耶のむかしをしたふ。道に堪能の執あさからぬ事しられたり。岩に腰かけてしばしやすらふほど、三尺ばかりなる桜のつぼみ半ばひらけるあり。ふり積雪の下に埋て、春を忘れぬ遲ざくらの花の心わりなし。炎天の梅花愛にかぼらがごとし。行尊僧正の哥の哀も愛に思ひ出て、猶まさりて覚ゆ。惣而此山中の微細、行者の法式として他言する事を禁ず。仍て筆をとゞめて記さず。坊に帰れば、阿闍利の需に依て、三山順礼の句短冊に書。

凉しさやほの三か月の羽黒山 雲の巻几つ崩て月の山 語られぬ湯殿にぬらす袂かな 湯殿山銭ふむ道の泪かな　曾良
羽黒を立て、鶴が岡の城下、長山氏重行と云物のふの家にむかへられて、詠誦一巻有。左吉も共に送りぬ。川舟に乗て酒田の湊に下る。淵庵不玉と云医師の許を宿とす。

あつみ山や吹浦かけて夕すゞみ 暑き日を海にいれたり最上川

After leaving Haguro, we went to the castle town of Tsurugaoka, where we were the guests of a samurai called Nagayama Shigeyuki. We composed a poetry sequence at his house. Sakichi came with us all the way. We boarded a river boat and went downstream to the port of Sakata. There, we stayed at the house of a physician named En’an Fugyoku:

from Hot Springs Mountain
all the way to Windy Bay –
the cool of evening

the blistering sun is gathered in the sea by Mogami River
江山水陸の風光数を尽して今象潟に方寸を責。酒田の湊より東北の方、山を越、礎を伝ひ、いさごをふみて、其際十里、日影やつかたぶく比、汐風真砂を吹上、雨朦朧として鳥海の山かくる。闇中に莫作して、雨も又奇也とせば、雨後の晴色又頼母敷と、蜑の苫屋に膝をいれて雨の晴を待。

其朝、天能霽て、朝日花やかにさし出る程に、象潟に舟をうかぶ。先能因嶋に舟をよせて、三年幽居の跡をとぶらひ、むかふの岸に舟をあがれば、花の上こぐとよまれし桜の老木、西行法師の記念をのこす。江上に御陵あり。神功后宮の御墓と云。寺を干満珠寺と云。比處に行幸ありし事いまだ聞ず。いかなる事にや。此寺の方丈に座して簾を捲ば、風景一眼の中に尽て、南に鳥海天をさゝゝえ、其陰うつりて江にあり。西はむや／の関路をかぎり、東に堤を築て秋田にかよふ道遥に、海北にかまえて浪打入る所を汐こしと云。江の縦横一里ばかり、俤松嶋にかよひて又異なり。松嶋は笑ふが如く、象潟はうらむがごとし。寂しさに悲しみをくはえて、地勢魂をなやますに似たり。

象潟や雨に西施がねぶの花 汐越や鶴はぎぬれて海涼し 祭礼 象潟や料理何くふ神祭 曾良
蜑の家や戸板を敷て夕涼みのゝ国の商人低耳 岩上に雎鳩の巣をみる 波こえぬ契ありてやみさごの巣 曾良

Festival in Kisakata – what special food is eaten
at the festival?
(Sora)

a fisherman’s hut – boards upon the sand, they taste
the cool of evening
(Teiji, a Mino merchant)

Seeing an osprey nest upon a rock:

did they make a vow
that waves should never hit there – those nesting ospreys?
(Sora)
酒田の余波日を重て、北陸道の雲に望、遙々のおもひ胸をいたましめて加賀の府まで百卅里と聞。鼠の関をこゆれば、越後の地に歩行を改て、越中の国一ぶりの関に到る。此間九日、暑湿の労に神をなやまし、病おこりて事をしるさず。

文月や六日も常の夜には似ず荒海や佐渡によこたふ天河

I was so loath to leave Sakata that we lingered there for several days. But then we set out towards the distant clouds on the Hokuriku [Northern Land] Road. The prospect of yet another long journey ahead filled me with dread. It was said to be well over three hundred miles to Kanazawa, the capital of Kaga Province. Once past the Barrier of Nezu, we continued our journey through Echigo Province as far as the Barrier of Ichiburi in Etchū. The heat and the rain during these nine days of travel wore me out completely, and I felt too ill to write anything:

so in the seventh month
the sixth day does not bring in a usual night

NOTE

billow-crested seas!
flowing towards Sado Isle
heaven’s Milky Way
今日は親しらず子しらず犬もどり駒返しなど云北国一の難所を越てつかれ侍れば、枕引よせて寝たるに、一間隔て面の方に若き女の声二人計ときこゆ。年老たるおのこの声も交て物語するをきければ、越後の国新潟と云所の遊女成し。伊勢参宮するとなて、此関までおのこの送りて、あすは古郷にかへす文したとてはかなき言伝などしやる也。白浪のよする汀に身をはふらし、あまのこの世をあさましべ下りて、定めなき契、日々の業因いかにつたなしと、物云をきく/

寝入て、あした旅立に、我々にむかひて、行衛しらぬ旅路のうさ、あまり覚束なう悲しく侍れば、見えがくれにも御跡をしたひ侍ん。衣の上の御情に大慈のめぐみをたれて結縁せさせ給へと泪を落す。不便の事には侍れども、我/

は所〃にてとゞまる方おほし。只人の行にまかせて行べし。神明の加護かならず恙なかるべしと云捨て出つゝ、哀さしばらくやまざりけらし。

一家に遊女もねたり萩と月

曾良にかたれば、書とをめ待る。

今日は親しらず子しらず犬もどり駒返しなど云北国一の難所を越てつかれ侍ければ、枕引よせて寝たるに、一間隔て面の方に若き女の声二人計ときこゆ。年老たるおのこの声も交て物語するをきけば、越後の国新潟と云所の遊女成し。伊勢参宮するとなて、此関までおのこの送りて、あすは古郷にかへす文したとてはかなき言伝などしやる也。白浪のよする汀に身をはふらし、あまのこの世をあさましべ下りて、定めなき契、日々の業因いかにつたなしと、物云をきく/

寝入て、あした旅立に、我々にむかひて、行衛しらぬ旅路のうさ、あまり覚束なう悲しく侍れば、見えがくれにも御跡をしたひ侍ん。衣の上の御情に大慈のめぐみをたれて結縁せさせ給へと泪を落す。不便の事には侍れども、我/

は所〃にてとゞまる方おほし。只人の行にまかせて行べし。神明の加護かならず恙なかるべしと云捨て出つゝ、哀さしばらくやまざりけらし。

一家に遊女もねたり萩と月

曾良にかたれば、書とをめ待る。
People speak of the ‘forty-eight channels’ of the Kurobe River, and indeed we had to cross countless streams before we reached the bay at Nago. Although it was not spring, we were urged not to miss the wisteria at Tako in early autumn. We asked a man the way and were told, ‘You’ll have to follow the shore for about ten miles, and then you’ll find Tako in the hollow of those mountains. There’re just a few miserable thatch-covered huts there. They belong to fishermen. You won’t find anyone to put you up for the night.’ Frightened away by his comments, we went on into Kaga Province:

scent of early rice —
to the right, as we push through,
the Ariso Sea
After crossing Mount Unohana and Kurikara Valley, we reached Kanazawa on the fifteenth day of the seventh month. We shared lodgings with a merchant named Kasho, who had come up from Osaka.

A man by the name of Isshō, who had begun to gain some reputation for his devotion to poetry, had been living in Kanazawa; but he had died young the previous winter. His brother arranged a haikai gathering in his memory:

the gravemound should move!
my crying voice is echoed in the autumn wind

On being invited to a thatched hut:

the cool of autumn –
our hands are busy peeling
melon and eggplant

Composed on the road:

the red, blazing red,
of the pitiless sun – yet
autumn in the wind
<大田神社>

小松と云所にて

しほらしき名や小松吹萩すゝき

此所太田の神社に詣。真盛が甲錦の切あり。往昔源氏に属せし時
、義朝公より給はらせ給とかや。げにも平士のものにあらず。目 庇より吹返しまで、菊から草のほりもの金をちりばめ龍頭に鍬形
打たり。真盛討死の後、木曾義仲願状にそへて此社にこめられ侍 よし、樋口の次郎が使せし事共、まのあたり縁記にみえたり。

むざんやな甲の下のきり% す

At a place called Komatsu [Young Pines]:

what a lovely name!
the wind blows through young pines, bush
clover, pampas grass

In Komatsu, we went to worship at the Tada Shrine, where we saw Sanemori’s helmet and a piece of his brocade tunic. We were told that long ago, while he was serving the Monomoto clan, the helmet had been a gift from Lord Yoshitomo. Indeed, it was no ordinary warrior’s headgear. From visor to earflaps, it was engraved with a chrysanthemum arabesque design inlaid with gold, and the front was crowned with a dragon’s head and a pair of horns. The shrine chronicles vividly tell how Kiso no Yoshinaka, after killing Sanemori in battle, offered the helmet with a petition to the shrine, and how Higuchi no Jirō acted as messenger.

the pity of it…
trapped underneath a helmet
a cricket chirping
那谷

山中の温泉に行ほど、白根が嶽跡にみなしてあゆむ。左の山際に観音堂あり。花山の法皇三十三所の順礼とげさせ給ひて後、大慈大悲の像を安置し給ひて那谷と名付給ふとや。那智谷組の二字をわかち侍しとぞ。奇石さま%に古松植ならべて、萱ぶきの小堂岩の上に造りかけて、殊勝の土地也。

石山の石より白し秋の風

As we walked towards the hot springs at Yamanaka, we could still see the peak of Shirane over our shoulders. A temple dedicated to Kannon stood to our left, at the foot of a mountain. We were told the temple had been founded by the retired Emperor Kazan. After he had completed a pilgrimage to the Thirty-Three Spiritual Places, he installed a statue here of the All-Compassionate, All-Merciful Kannon, and gave the place the name ‘Nata’, combining the ‘na’ of Nachi with the ‘ta’ of Tanigumi. There were many strangely shaped rocks, rows of ancient pines, and a small thatched temple atop a massive boulder. It was a place of marvellous beauty.

whiter far than all the stones of Ishiyama –
the autumnal wind
<山中> 温泉に浴す。其功有明に次と云。

山中や菊はたおらぬ湯の匂
あるじとする物は久米之助とていまだ小童也。かれが父誹諧を好
み、洛の貞室若輩のむかし愛に来りし比、風雅に辱しめられて、 洛に帰て貞徳の門人となって世にしるる。功名の後、此一村判詞 の料を請すと云。今更むかし語とはなりぬ。

曾良は腹を病て、伊勢の国長嶋と云所にゆかりあれば、先立て行 に、

行行てたふれ伏とも萩の原 曾良
と書置たり。行ものゝ悲しみ残ものゝうらみ隻鳧のわかれて雲に まよふがごとし。予も又

今日よりや書付消さん笠の露

We bathed in the hot springs, which were said to be second only to Ariake in effectiveness

at Yamanaka,
no need for chrysanthemums –
the scent of hot springs

The innkeeper, who was still a youth, was called Kumenosuke. His father had been very fond of poetry, and had put the poet Teishitsu to shame by his superior knowledge, when the master had come here from Kyōto as a young man. Teishitsu went back to the city, studied under Teitoku, and later gained recognition. But even after he became famous, it is said, he would never accept any payment for correcting verses written by anyone from this village. This is an old, old story.

Sora had developed a stomach complaint, and he went ahead to Nagashima in Ise Province, where he had relatives. He left me this verse:

onwards I must go –
if I should fall, let it be amidst bush clover

The sorrow of the one who went ahead, and the sadness of the one who remained behind, seemed like two lapwings parting from each other and losing their way in the clouds. I too wrote a verse:

from this day the words
inside my hat will vanish
with the dew of tears  NOTE
Still in Kaga Province, I stayed at Zenshōji, a temple outside the castle town of Daishōji. Sora had stayed there the night before, and had left this poem for me:

```
throughout the long night
listening to the autumn wind in the hills behind
```

We had been only one night apart, yet it seemed like a thousand miles. That night, I too lay sleepless in the guest room, listening to the autumn wind. Towards dawn, I could clearly hear the sound of voices chanting a sutra. A gong was struck, and I went into the refectory. Eager to get to Echizen Province that day, I left the hall as soon as possible, but some young monks ran after me to the foot of the stairs, paper and inkstone in their hands. The willow in the garden had scattered some of its leaves, and so I wrote:

```
let’s sweep the garden
then set out – in the temple
the willow leaves fall
```

Straw sandals on, I dashed off this impromptu verse.
越前の境、吉崎の入江を舟に棹して汐越の松を尋ぬ。

終宵嵐に波をはこばせて 月をたれたる汐越の松

此一首にて数景尽たり。もし一辧を加るものは、無用の指を立る がごとし。

丸岡天竜寺の長老古き因あれば尋ぬ。又金沢の北枝といふもの、 かりそめに見送りて、此處までしたひ来る。所々の風景過さず思 ひつぐけて、折節あはれなる作意など聞ゆ。今既別に望みて、

物書て扇引さく余波哉

五十丁山に入て永平寺を礼す。道元禅師の御寺也。邦機千里を避 て、かゝる山陰に跡をのこし給ふも貴きゆへ有とかや。

---

I crossed Lake Yoshizaki by boat, the border of Echizen province, and going to visit the Shiogoshi [Tide-Crossing] Pines.

throughout the long night
the waves are lashed by a storm that drives them to shore –
and moonlight drips from their boughs,
the pines of Shiogoshi

In this single poem, Saigyō crystallises the essence of the scene at Shiozaki. To add even a single word would be like adding an extra useless finger to a hand.

At Maruoka, I called upon an old friend, the abbot of the Tenryū Temple. A man called Hokushi, from Kanazawa, had intended to accompany me for a short distance, but he had finally come all the way to Maruoka, unable to say goodbye. No sight on the journey had escaped his notice, and he wrote some moving poems. Now that we were parting, I wrote:

I’ve scribbled words, but how to tear the fan apart – goodbyes are so hard

I went three or four miles into the mountains to worship at Eiheiji, the temple of the Zen Master Dōgen. I understand that he had some profound reason for avoiding the vicinity of the capital and for building his temple in such remote mountains as these.
Although Fukui was only six or seven miles away, I did not set out until after supper, and it was an uncertain journey along the twilit road. Fukui was where Tōsai had long been living as a recluse. He had come to Edo and visited me once – I was not sure exactly when, but it must have been more than ten years previously. I assumed he must be very old and feeble now, perhaps even dead. But when I asked about him, I was told that he was still alive in such-and-such a place. I found his wretched, tiny house in an out-of-the-way corner of the town. Moonflowers and bottle-gourds covered the walls, and the door was hidden beneath cockscomb and broom grass. This must be it, I thought, and rapped on the gate. A woman of humble appearance came out and asked: ‘Where have you come from, your reverence? The master’s gone to visit someone in the neighbourhood. If you’ve got business with him, please search him out there.’ I assumed she was his wife. It was just like a scene from that old novel \NOTE, I thought, as I went in search of him. I found him without trouble, and spent two nights in his house, after which I got ready to set out again, hoping to see the full moon over Tsuruga Harbour. Tōsai offered to keep me company and, with his kimono skirts tucked jauntily into his sash, set out in high spirits as my guide.
<敦賀>
漸白根が嶽かくれて、比那が嵩あらはる。あさむづの橋をわたりて、玉江の蘆は穂に出にけり。鴬の関を過て湯尾峠を越れば、燧が城、かへるやまに初鴈を聞て、十四日の夕ぐれつるがの津に宿をもとむ。その夜、月殊晴たり。あすの夜もかくあるべきにやといてば、越路の習ひ、猶明夜の陰晴はかりがたしと、あるじに酒すゝめられて、けいの明神に夜参す。仲哀天皇の御廟也。社頭神さびて、松の木の間に月のもり入たる。おまへの白砂霜を敷るごとし。往昔遊行二世の上人、大願発起の事ありて、みづから草を刈、土石を荷ひ泥渟をかはかせて、参詣往来の煩なし。古例今にたえず。神前に真砂を荷ひ給ふ。これを遊行の砂持と申侍ると、亭主かたりける。

月清し遊行のもてる砂の上
十五日、亭主の詞にたがはず雨降。
名月や北国日和定なき
十六日、空霁たればますほの小貝ひろはんと種の濱に舟を走す。海上七里あり。天屋何某と云もの、破箆小竹筒などこまやかにしたためさせ、僕あまた舟にとりのせて、追風時のまに吹着ぬ。濱はわづかなる海士の小家にて侘しき法花寺あり。愛に茶を飲酒をあたらめて、夕ぐれのわびしさ感に堪たり。

寂しさや須磨にかちたる濱の秋 波の間や小貝にまじる萩の塵

其日のあらまし、等栽に筆をとらせて寺に残す。

On the sixteenth, the skies cleared, and so we went by boat to Iro-no-hama Beach to gather some little clam shells. It was about seventeen miles across the water. A man called Ten’ya had prepared all kinds of refreshments for us – lunch baskets and bamboo flasks of sake – and had ordered several of his servants to go with us in the boat. In no time at all, a tail wind blew us to the shore. On the beach, there were only a few fishermen’s shacks and a forlorn Nichiren temple where we drank tea and warmed up sake. As evening began to fall, the sense of isolation was unbearable.

oh what loneliness …
more desolate than Suma
this beach in autumn

between each wave-break …
mixed with small shells, the debris of bush-clover flowers

I asked Tōsai to write a description of what had happened that day, and left it at the temple.
路通も此みなとまで出むかひて、みのゝ国へと伴ふ。駒にたすけられて、大塙の庄に入ば、曾良も伊勢より来合、越人も馬をとばせて、如行が家に入集る。前川子荊口父子、其外したしき人々日夜とぶらひて、蘇生のものにあふがごとく、且悦び且いたる 蛤のふたみにわれ行秋ぞ

Rotsū came to Tsuraga to welcome me back, and we travelled together to Mino Province. Our journey was made easier by having horses to ride. When we arrived at Ōgaki, Sora joined us from Ise. Etsujin had also galloped in on horseback, and we all gathered together at Jokō’s house. All day and night, my closest friends – Zensenji, Keikō, Keikō’s sons, and others – came to visit. They seemed as happy and concerned as if I had just returned from the dead.

Despite my travel weariness, I set out on the sixth day of the ninth month [18 October] to witness the rebuilding of the Great Shrine at Ise. As I stepped again into a boat, I wrote:

so, to Futami,
like a clam ripped from its shell…
autumn’s deepening now dog-shooting grounds a reference to a game in which horse-riders competed to shoot a dog with blunted arrowheads.

as he aimed his arrow at the fan a celebrated challenge recorded in earlier history and literature. Nasu no Yoichi was commanded to shoot at a fan held up by a woman on a swaying boat some two hundred and fifty yards away. He prays to Hachiman, the guardian deity of the samurai, for success, declaring that he will kill himself should the arrow miss. But he hits his target.

all the Ten Sights according to Bashō’s companion, Sora, these sights were mainly prominent rocks, buildings, and clumps of plum and bamboo, within the temple precincts.

why the poet an allusion to a poem by Taira no Kanemori (d. 990), in which he expresses the wish to tell the people in the capital that he had crossed the Barrier. For him, as for Bashō, the Shirakawa Barrier clearly represented an emotional and psychological crossing-point, as well as a simple geographical frontier.

Kiyosuke a writer (1104-77), whose book on poetics records the tradition of changing clothes upon crossing the Shirakawa Barrier.

the two young wives a reference to the widows of two warrior brothers, Satô Tsunenobu (1158-85) and Tadanobu (1161-86). After their deaths, to console their mother, the two widows are said to have donned soldiers’ armour to pretend they were her sons returning in triumph.

a tombstone that makes you weep the tombstone in question was built by local people in honour of Yang-hu (221-78), an especially respected governor. All who saw it could not help weeping there.

Masshōzan the Sinified reading of Sue-no-matsuyama.

‘a single pair of wings or intertwining branches’ a quotation from a celebrated poem by Po Chü-i, ‘Song of Everlasting Regret’. The images are clearly metaphors for everlasting love.

the Golden Hall’s seven precious things so designated in Buddhism, according to Hiroaki Sato. The allusions are to gold, silver, emerald, glass, giant clam, coral, and agate.

‘dust was raining from the edges of the clouds’ a phrase from a poem by Tu Fu (712-770).

ancient example of Kan-chiang and Mo-yeh a husband and wife team, who were the most famous swordsmiths in ancient China.

‘plum blossoms in the scorching sun’ an allusion to two lines which compare the poetry of Ch’en Yü-I (1090-1138) to the blossoms of plum trees under a scorching sun.

the sixth day does not bring in / a usual night The seventh night of the seventh month was Tanabata, a festival that celebrated the meeting of two stars in the sky once a year. The anticipation of both festival and meeting, Bashō implies, means that the night before is also a special time.

the words / inside my hat Travelling companions, such as Bashō and Sora, often wrote standard inscriptions, such as ‘two travellers alone in all the world’, inside their hats. Bashō’s sorrow at Sora’s departure will erase those words.

how to tear the fan apart now that summer had ended, a fan was no longer needed. In spite of this, Bashō seems to have impulsively scribbled some words on a fan, which made it all the more difficult to throw it away.

that old novel seemingly an allusion to a sentence in Murasaki Shikibu’s eleventh-century The Tale of Genji, in which Genji muses, “I’ve heard something like this only in an old story’, Genji thought, mystified.”
Translations

The major translations of Oku no Hosomichi into English are:

- Keene, Donald The Narrow Road to Oku. Tokyo, New York and London: Kodansha International, 1996. Illustrated by Miyata Masayuki. [one of only two editions to place the original Japanese text alongside the translation]

- Sato, Hiroaki Bashō’s Narrow Road: Spring & Autumn Passages. Berkeley, California: Stone Bridge Press, 1996. [English translation on recto pages, with extensive annotations on corresponding verso pages]

Critical studies concerned with translation

Several of the editions above present introductory comments about the problems to be faced in any translation of Oku no Hosomichi. By far the most detailed and valuable exploration of those difficulties, though, is Mark Jewel, ‘The Beat of Different Drummers: English Translations of Hokku from Matsuo Basho’s Oku no hosomichi’, World Haiku Review, July 2002 [see also under Links section below].

Links

Internet sites concerned with Basho’s life and work, and especially with haiku in general, are very numerous indeed. Searching simply for “Matsuo Basho” in Google, for example, yields over 17,000 references. For a particularly pertinent site, which presents the complete text of five English translations of Oku no Hosomichi (Britton, Corman, McCullough, Miner and Yuasa, above), together with an extensive commentary, see Stephen Kohl’s Matsuo Basho’s ‘Narrow Road to the Deep North’ at http://www.uoregon.edu/~kohl/basho/. For more general studies of haiku, the following are very useful:
http://www.gardendigest.com/poetry/index.htm
http://my.execpc.com/~ohaus/haiklink.htm
http://www.worldhaikuclub.org http://www.worldhaikureview.org http://www.f.waseda.jp/mjewel/jlit/